Not for Her

The suffrage parade was rounding the plaza. A jeering youth with his velvet hat back on his head and a pair of large yellow shoes made facetious remarks as the marchers trailed by.

"Back to the cook stove!" he cried.

An elderly man looked around at him.

"Is your mother in the parade?" he asked.

"My mother!" gasped the youth, "Well, I should say not! My mother ain't got no time for such tootin'—she goes out washin'."
